10 CURRENT WRITING CONSULTANTS

Congratulations to Dr. Harry Denny for being promoted to full professor!

Congratulations to Tammy Conard-Salvo on her new position as Assistant Director for Diversity, Equity and Inclusion in the College of Health and Human Services!
Message from the Director

This fall marks the usual academic year renewal: Thousands of first-years wandering campus as they transition from Boiler Gold Rush to fully-fledged college students navigating course and social activities. However, the 2021 version is remarkable because the Writing Lab returned to some semblance of normal. We’re back to meeting students in Heavilon and across campus at our satellite locations, and the space is back to its typical buzz and hum with sessions happening face-to-face and online.

We’re also marking significant departures and arrivals. Tammy Conard-Salvo has left the Writing Lab for a new position as Assistant Director of Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion in the College of Health and Human Sciences. We all miss her and wish her well in this professional opportunity and challenge. After a national search, we are excited to welcome Dr. Michael Reich, who assumes the position of Associate Director for Undergraduate Education. Michael brings years of experience mentoring and teaching writers as well as a love for creating poetry and fiction.

This fall also brings a crop of undergraduate writing consultant visitors from Universidad del Norte (Uninorte) in Barranquilla, Colombia. These women are part of a larger exchange between Universidad del Norte and Purdue that was funded through a US State Department 100,000 America’s grant to support the creation of writing centers and peer mentoring around writing in Central and South America. In the first part, Curtis Jewell and Mitch Hobza visited Uninorte during the fateful Spring 2020 term, which was cut short because of the emergence of the global coronavirus pandemic.

While COVID-19 has forced so many changes over the last couple years, it has created opportunities for innovation and outreach. During the Spring 2021 semester and continuing this academic year, the Writing Lab is partnering with Purdue Polytechnic High School to support its students around writing. Much of these students’ coursework is project-based with integration of multiple discipline to guide their activities. Writing consultants from West Lafayette will be joining these students from South Bend and Indianapolis for discussion and collaboration, whether for their academic subjects or application writing for college.

Just as our 10,000 new first-years each have their own stories and bring excitement to campus, all the activity and energy that our students bring to the everyday life of the Writing Lab makes our space one of the most dynamic around. We’re so very excited to be inching back to what we cherish the most: Writers, students, faculty, administration celebrating collaboration, learning, and research.

...ALL THE ACTIVITY AND ENERGY THAT OUR STUDENTS BRING TO THE EVERYDAY LIFE OF THE WRITING LAB MAKES OUR SPACE ONE OF THE MOST DYNAMIC AROUND.
Congratulations!

As we continue to co-navigate the COVID-19 pandemic, the OWL team remains consciously committed to providing resources that support students, teachers, and writers as they maneuver through new and familiar learning and working environments. With virtual and online elements still very much a part of the teaching and learning landscape, we continue to draw attention to our Remote Teaching Resource Portal, where there are several materials, resources, and insights to consider.

In my role, I’ve been fortunate enough to take on remarkable opportunities by partnering and collaborating with several dedicated faculty, staff, and students who embrace a shared fundamental vision: continued success for the OWL. As our team continues to develop new content that reflects the needs and interests of our community and constituents alike, we have recognized and responded to salient matters pertaining to the site that have been voiced to us. One of the major areas we’re focusing on is site usability and accessibility. We’re continuing to devote a large part of our energy toward designing a more navigable, accessible, and engaging space that is motivated by several intertwined factors, largely apropos of the growth in both the sheer amount of content the OWL houses and the number of people who utilize it. We’re also working hard to bring more secondary teaching and learning content to the OWL by gauging what kinds of resources are needed. This wouldn’t be possible without the help of several education professionals, across a range of experience levels, who have remained open to deliberating with us and exchanging ideas about how to approach this work.

Beyond these large-scale efforts, we continue to ensure that our priorities for the OWL are informed by the people (on our campus and around the world) who continue to uphold the Purdue OWL as the trusted resource that it has been for 27 years. The OWL simply couldn’t have the impact it does without the contributions of the many. As we move forward along our trajectory, we strive to continue growing our community and optimizing our content by remaining attentive, responsive, and collaborative in all that we do.
Current Tutor Spotlights

JADA JOHNSON, UTA

I was greeted by the yellows, oranges, and blues of the chairs speckling the room. This is my third semester working in the Writing Lab, including the summer, and almost everything is completely new. On my first day in the physical Writing Lab, the colors brought a warmth and coziness to the space, perhaps in how different they were from the bleak, sterile classroom spaces. The pencils, erasers, tissues, and hand sanitizer dotting the tables showed a deep consideration for everyone in the space, tutors and writers alike. The lab stretched itself out in a larger space than I had imagined. It was configured differently than how I’d remembered.

The last two semesters, I worked remotely and all of my appointments were e-tutoring. Tutoring for me was a sit down at my desk or on my bed, open my laptop, clock in, check for appointments, read and comment, and clock out routine. That was work (besides the occasional meeting, of course). My only experience with the physical space then was what existed in my memory of a very brief visit with Vicki my freshman year and in the few pictures and videos I had seen of it. When I got there, I was given a name tag and a chance to meet our newest Michael, who was already happy to chat about concerns, strategies, and sessions. When I was sitting near Harry’s office, where the bookshelves enfolded a table, I was amazed! There were books on tutoring and pretty much any kind of writing: theses, fiction, and much more. I realized that I recognized that little library corner. I had seen it in one of the observation videos I had watched during online L2 training. That bit of familiarity made me feel more comfortable in the space and gave that memory the physical context it was missing.

It wasn’t until my second work week in the lab that I got my first online and face-to-face appointments. It took me a few minutes to get my bearings during both. Strategies shared by other tutors and discussed during our tutoring practicum course came floating back to me. I plucked a few from my memory to get started. The online appointment didn’t seem so different from e-tutoring, with the screen between us, but my location was completely different. I wasn’t alone in a place where I normally did homework, I was in a bright and comfortable space, surrounded by supportive members of the Writing Lab. Help was only a short walk and question away.

Even so, the face-to-face session required more adjustment on my part. I was paying more attention to how I was sitting, where I was looking, my volume, and what gestures I was making. I was also trying to discern how they perceived me, ensure that they were engaged, and glean if what I was doing was helpful. Both writers said that our session helped. Those sessions helped me, too, because now I feel more established and confident tutoring in the Writing Lab.
Who is the New Guy

MICHAEL REICH, ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR OF UNDERGRADUATE TUTOR EDUCATION

Hey everyone! My name is Michael Reich, and I’m the new Associate Director for undergraduate education of the Lab.

While I’ve mainly been teaching composition for the past few years, my career started in writing centers back in 2008 when I landed my first tutor gig at Stony Brook University. Even though I moved from being a tutor to teaching writing in 2013, the value of tutoring never left my radar. I made sure to run my composition classes around a conferencing model where I met with students individually for each paper to help them develop their ideas and understanding of the writing process.

When I started my doctorate, I worked in Writing Centers again, presenting at NEWCA and IWCA. I also helped get graduate students represented on the IWCA board, being part of a joint effort with Rebecca Hallman Martini to create IWCA-GO, the first recognized IWCA graduate student organization. Any GTA’s looking for community, I would suggest checking that out!

After finishing my PhD amidst the long haul of COVID, teaching virtually for a year and really seeing no one but family, working in a writing center environment is a welcome change. I’m excited at the prospect of being in person and working one on one instead of behind a computer screen talking to large swaths of blank Zoom screens (although thankfully I must say, most of the classes I taught were filled with camera happy students!).

As the associate director for undergraduate education, I’ll be involved in a range of activities, from developing, updating, and assessing the tutor staff education, to supporting recruitment, training UTA’s, collaborating with the writing lab stuff to address outreach and everyday logistics of the lab, as well as developing research initiatives in coordination with Harry, one of which I hope will be centered around the work of my dissertation involving how to utilize the principles of deliberative democracy and improvisation to create more effective tutoring sessions.

ELIZABETH GEIB CHAVIN, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF WAC & WORKSHOPS

In just a few short months, my time at the Purdue Writing Lab will come to a close as I open new opportunities for working with students, staff, and faculty at a new institution. Over the past seven years I have been a graduate tutor, Assistant Director for Undergraduate Tutor Education, Assistant Director for Writing Across the Curriculum and Workshops, and collaborated on several conference presentations and special projects with Writing Lab affiliates. As I reflect on my experience, I am filled with gratitude to be a part of a community that genuinely cares about the betterment of students on campus. My proudest moments occurred while mentoring prospective undergraduate tutors and seeing them prosper in their own sessions as they apply their own perspective and expertise in aiding students’ confidence and agency in writing. I am also honored to have worked with faculty from nearly every disciplinary college on campus as we work together to implement sustainable writing instruction in their classrooms.

As I envision the years to come, I think about my lessons learned as a teacher, tutor, administrator, and scholar. Writing centers are transformative spaces where growing professionals challenge themselves to be better listeners, communicators, and advocates for the communities they associate with. At the same time, institutional spaces have their own set of challenges. Students, tutors, administrators, and faculty all juggle demanding workloads and writing requirements while also managing personal obstacles—whether dealing with their distant home-life, maintaining relationships in their communities, managing mental health, or navigating discriminatory moments that threaten their ability to fit in. Because writing is a vulnerable act, writing center affiliates must approach writing support with empathy, always meeting folks where they are in the moment, and adapting to the circumstantial climate. I am proud that my writing lab colleagues work everyday to make our space more inclusive and equitable, and I’m privileged to have learned from the very best. I’m excited for the future of writing centers and look forward to taking part in that continual growth.

In the spring of 2020 two graduate teaching assistants of the Purdue Writing Lab visited the Universidad del Norte in Barranquilla, Colombia as part of the 100K America research grant. They were part of a research project entitled: “Translanguaging: A Writing Laboratories Academic Exchange.” After being delayed for a year due to COVID-19, Purdue is hosting five undergraduate students who work at Universidad del Norte’s writing center (El Centro de Escritura) so they can experience and be mentored in the Purdue Writing Lab.

Isabella Visbal Narvaez

My name is Gabriela, I’m 23 years old, and I’m a visiting student with the Writing Lab at Purdue. My field of study is international relations, and I’m very passionate about art, culture, languages, traveling, and diversity; and my academic interests are leaning towards democracy and human rights. I hope my time in the Writing Lab helps my writing center back in Colombia to grow and acquire new techniques, and also helps me grow as a person and as a writer!

Gabriela Alvarez-Correa Camargo

My name is Karelly. I am 21 years old, I am from Barranquilla - Colombia, and I’m a visiting student with the Writing Lab at Purdue. I am in the last semester of Law while doing an advanced course in civil and family rights. I spend my free time listening to music, doing karaoke, and watching series (I love those about crimes and mysteries). I hope this time in the writing lab allows me to improve my writing and tutoring skills while learning more about a new culture.

Karelly Guerrero Ariza

My name is Karla Medina and I am a visiting student in the Writing Lab at Purdue. Currently completing my studies in Modern Languages and Culture. I am passionate about linguistics, art, and literature. I hope to learn more about the writing process and its techniques in this experience.

Karla Medina Escorcia

My name is Milenis. I am 20 years old and I am from Barranquilla, Colombia. I’m at the Purdue Writing Lab as a visiting student from Universidad del Norte’s ECO Writing Center. I study Social Communication and Journalism, and this is my last semester. I enjoy reading novels, watching movies, and listening to music. I’m looking forward to improving my writing skills as I learn about other cultures and try new storytelling styles.
